BROOKS RECEIVES WEBSITE AWARD FROM ROCHESTER BUSINESS JOURNAL

Monroe County Executive Maggie Brooks today received the “e-Business Executive of the Year” award from the Rochester Business Journal for providing citizens with greater access to County government and improving online services for residents and businesses.

“Monroe County’s website is another example of our commitment to technological innovation in County government,” said Brooks. “This dynamic and user-friendly website has improved services for our community by providing a 24/7 online resource for citizens to interact with their County government. This award is a well-deserved recognition for our team and a reflection of our ongoing commitment to better serve the taxpayers of Monroe County.”

Brooks received this award on the heels of her 2007 State of the County Address where she announced a new partnership with Frontier to develop a wireless network throughout the County.

This is the third recognition Brooks and the County have received for the new website since its launch in 2006. Prior awards include the “Best of the Web Award – Nationwide Finalist” by the Center for Digital Government, and “Best of the Web for Local Government” from the Rockefeller Institute of Government’s New York State Forum.
